LOVE AND DEATH.
BY MATELDA SMITH.

Mighty victors, love and death,
Oh! how far ye seem apart;
But, alas! how oft ye meet
In the same devoted heart.

Flowers of sweetest beauty bloom
On the path of life to-day;
But to-morrow death appears,
Bearing all their bloom away—
Bearing all life's light and joy—
All its joys and pleasures—
To the lonely, lonely grave—
But hush! death, thy victory's o'er—
Thou art fettered now in chains—
Thou art overpowered at last—
And eternal love remains.

Aye, remains for evermore,
Brightening all the shadowy way—
Bright in songs of joy and love,
Night in everlasting day.

The Anniversary.
A FRAGMENT
BY MRS. MARY C. VAUGHAN.

It is the twenty-fourth day of December—the eighteenth anniversary of the wedding day. Perhaps you think I celebrate it with festivities, and gather around me friends to rejoice with me in the day of my joy. Perhaps you believe me surrounded by a group of fair-haired children, my first-born, already with downy lip, and voice that gathers strength for his coming manhood, my pretty Alice, my one-evalued, and all the little ones that have come and gone. Perhaps you think of me seeking with vivacity trust and confidence the loving eyes of him who held me by the hand eighteen years ago to-day, and promised to walk by my side, in all faithfulness, and love, and honor, until death should part us.

You smile, Julie, as you think how the nature you knew to be so affectionate and trusting has expanded, during these years that have been developing a wife and mother's love. You believe me a happy wife and mother, do you not, surrounded by all that wealth can purchase, with one who loves and prizes me above every earthly possession, and extends over me, constantly, his affectionate and watchful care? I point to yourself all beautiful home-scenes, in which I am the principal figure, and of proud, handsome husband and beautiful children are gathered round me—a graceful group. Is it not so, my Julie?

I have never had the heart to tell you how false were the impressions, I had so long allowed you to retain, of my situation and circumstances. But I shall not live to see another anniversary of this day, and I am resolved to tell you all ere it is too late, and thus save you the shock of hearing it hereafter from the unsympathizing lips of strangers.

I was an orphan and alone. I had a home, not grudgingly bestowed, but uncomfortable and unbecoming, in the family of a distant cousin of my mother's, my only relative in that region. I was not happy, for I yearned for love. During my mother's life her love, so tender and intense, had been sufficient for me. I missed it beyond the power of words to tell. For these persons by whom I was surrounded, though kindly, made few demonstrations of affection, and though full of real interest in my welfare, were always distant and unsympathizing in manner.

You did not see me, Julie, during that period. You have been with me only in the happier days of my life—when my dear mother was living, and while my wedding joys were as yet undimmed even by a shadowy premonition of the coming sorrow.

I met Hugh Armour at a rural fete in the fragrant month of roses. I was not introduced to him, through some accidental omission of my hostess, whom I heard him request to present him to me. But during the day he chanced to render me some slight service—an attention such as a gentleman may bestow upon a stranger. We were in an unfrequented part of the grounds, and as he accompanied me to my friends, we spoke together the few common-places of the occasion. Thus commenced my acquaintance with Hugh Armour.

I think he admired me from the first. We met very often during that Summer, that to me was all fragrance and music; and joy, for in it I learned to love this splendid, fascinating man who bent his proud head before me with such deference as seemed to me only due to a crowned queen.

No sooner had my friends discovered that I distinguished Hugh Armour among my numerous admirers, for my wealth and the beauty, that is all faded now, brought many sighing swains to my feet, than they spoke to me of him frequently and always in his disfavor. "Had they done this lovingly, I think that, even in spite of my growing love for him, I would have listened. But their words were vague and sneeringly spoken, and they had the effect which any student of human nature might have predicted. I called them persecution, and accused myself to defend my absent lover.

I should have known that those among whom Hugh Armour's life had been spent must know well all the traits of his character and disposition, and also the entire truth of his conduct. He looked good and noble, he was bitterly condemned, and my sympathies went with my love and trust.

Awake to find the man I had loved and trusted, whom I had almost deified, a sensual villain, morally hideous and loathsome, without principle, without even a decent respect for public opinion, or the ordinary rules of social decorum.

Outraged in feeling, neglected, even harshly treated, I lingered through months of suffering. An infamous woman was, during a portion of that time, an inmate of the house under some plausible excuse of employment; nor was she dismissed until the physicians pronounced my case, aggravated as it had been by mental suffering, one of extreme danger. Then Hugh seemed to return to something like his former tenderness, and for weeks he devoted himself to me with zealous care. I hoped that the impression was permanent, that he had returned to me to stray no more, and, become more peaceful, I gradually sank back to health, and that I had died then!

I would not detail, if I could, all the trials and sufferings of the eight years; nor was the life I shall pass them all, as sorrowful similar to those endured by every woman who is so unfortunate as to give her hand to a selfish sensualist; and come to that period when positive neglect and brutal outrage drove me to the only resource left to such as me—a legal separation.

Ten years have passed since this step was taken. Ten years I have lived alone, and in poverty. Alone, for Hugh Armour stole from me Lionel, my sole remaining child, and I have not looked upon his face for many a year. In poverty, for he had squandered all my property long before our separation.

Thus it is, Julie, that I pass this melancholy anniversary of my marriage. I sit alone, amid the phantom of dead hopes that always elude my longing grasp. I make no moan in the world's ear, for it has little sympathy with sorrows such as mine. I never utter complaints in the presence of my friends, for they all warned me of the fate I so rashly chose. I only write here, to you, this brief mention of my crushed heart and wasted hopes, and sorrowful life, so that when you return once more to your native land, and seek the spot where I shall be buried, you may not be shocked by the coarse, unpoetical tale of my life from others' lips.

I ask you only to believe, Julie, that I tried to do my duty. That I was patient and loving, till patience ceased to be a virtue, and every noble trait of Hugh Armour's character had become lost, and there was naught in his brutal and utterly selfish nature that a woman who respected herself could love.

I would have lived apart from him without recourse to legal forms to bind our union, but the law, that throws its shield around happy marriages, gave him the power of torturing me by his unrelenting presence, of interfering in all my plans, of appropriating all my little earnings. Such a degree of peace as made existence possible was only gained by dissolving the marriage contract—this utter being all that remained, of what I had so fondly believed a soul-union. Thus, only, I also believed, could I save Lionel from the contamination of this bad man's example.

But, Julie, scarce had the legal forms been completed with, scarce had I been pronounced free, and settled myself and my child in the poor house I had hired, while I was one day absent, busied in my task of teaching, he stole the boy from his nurse, and fled beyond pursuit!

Oh, Julie! that was the most terrible of all! But, even through that sorrow, God saw fit that I should live.

And so ten years have passed. I sit here alone, on this eve of Christmas, and write to the only friend who still believes me happy, a tale that will sadden her true heart. And Julie, I am dying—whether the end shall be in days, or weeks, or months, I know not, but it cannot be much longer delayed; and thus, in the shadow of that awful change, I make my first and last request to you. If ever you meet Lionel in the world, seek him out, and be kind to him for his dead mother's sake. Tell him of me sometimes—how I loved him, how I prayed for him even to the last. How, in every solitary hour, I have seen him before me in all the winning grace of childhood; how I have pictured to myself his changed look as he approaches manhood; how, in the silent watches of the night, I have vainly stretched forth my arms, crying for him to come home to the mother's warm heart; how—oh, Julie! it has come—a sight—sound—all but the thought of you, of Lionel, of Heaven, fades from me—Julie, remember! Lionel—farewell! We shall meet in Heaven—

County Council.
Tuesday, Feb. 1.
The Warden took the chair at ten o'clock. The by-law to pay members for their attendance was read a second time, and the Council went into Committee of the Whole on it. Mr. J. Evans in the chair. After a short discussion the committee rose without reporting.

The Council then resolved itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of taking into consideration the duties of the Commissioners to be appointed on county property, Mr. Jeffery in the chair.

The following resolution was carried in committee—"That three commissioners be appointed on the county property for the year 1859, whose duties it shall be to take charge of the county buildings and their appendages, to superintend any repairs and improvements they may deem necessary for their more proper use and convenience, and the necessity for which may arise during the recess of the Council." They are also authorized and empowered to rent or lease any rooms or offices, and to fix the rents to be paid by occupants for the same, for one year, or any less time, and to make all contracts, &c. The Warden, Messrs. Tyrell, Wheeler, A. F. Scott and Reesor, were then appointed to act as commissioners.

Mr. Rowland Burr was then introduced and addressed the Council at great length on the advantages to be derived by the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal. A resolution was adopted to the effect that the Council petition the Legislature in favour of the construction of the Canal. It was then resolved to appoint a committee of five members to draft a petition to the Legislature praying for a sufficient grant of wild lands to be appropriated towards the expenses of constructing the Toronto and Georgian Bay Canal. Messrs. Hart, Wheeler, Howland, Armstrong, and Tyrell being appointed to draft such petition.

The Clerk, Mr. Elliot, was then instructed to communicate with the Chief Superintendent of Education, relative to the time most convenient for the Council to "visit" the Normal School.

The Council then adjourned till this morning at ten o'clock.

Wednesday, Feb. 2.
The business before the Council was entirely of a formal character, the greater portion of the day being occupied in the consideration of the Report presented by the Committee on Printing.—Globe.

Thursday, Feb. 2.
The Warden took the chair at 3 o'clock. After their return in the afternoon, the following resolution moved by Cap. Armstrong, and seconded by Mr. Davis, was adopted without discussion—"That this Council having had the pleasure of visiting the Normal and Model Schools, desire to express the gratification felt by them at witnessing the highly efficient state of that institution, and the approbation with which they viewed the addition to its collections, and the pleasure they felt in seeing the beautiful selections of paintings and sculpture, and also the splendid school apparatus, and maps selected by the Chief Superintendent of Education, and intended to serve as models for a school of art and design. And they desire further to express their opinion that Upper Canada owes a debt of gratitude to the Chief Superintendent for his devotedness to the cause of education, and for the high standard which our present system has already attained. They also wish to express their great estimation of the energy, perseverance and firmness displayed by Dr. Ryerson in the discharge of the highly responsible duties of his office, to which it is to be attributed in a great measure the present prosperous condition of our schools, and trust he may long be spared to discharge the responsible duties of his office."

Friday, Feb. 3.
The Warden took the Chair at 10 o'clock. The forenoon session of the Council was for the greater part occupied in receiving the reports of Standing Committees, and in the passage of bye-laws—one to provide for the payment of Grand and Petit Jurors, and another to regulate the licensing of auctioneers.

In the afternoon session, the second report of the Committee on Printing, was received and adopted. The report for printing the usual number of bye-laws, and empowering the clerk to make the necessary arrangements therefor.

Mr. Tyrell brought in the report of the Standing Committee on Education. The report contained recommendations for the payment of the expenses of several circuit boards of instruction, and granting to the County Grammar Schools the following aid: Streetsville, $200; Weston, $200; Newmarket, $200; Markham, $200; Brampton, $200; Richmond Hill, $200; in all, $1,200. A clause referring to the fact that the goal and prison libraries had been recommended by the Superintendent of Education, which was gratifying to those who had advocated a library for the county goal three years ago. After alluding to some minor matters, the Committee rose, reported progress, and asked leave to sit again.

Mr. Reesor said he rose for the purpose of making a few observations relative to the resolutions which had been brought up in the Council on the previous day. He alluded to the resolution in reference to the Superintendent of Education, which he (Mr. Reesor) considered bore a political tendency. If that resolution was allowed to go forth without any explanation, it would appear to the public as if the Council approved of the course pursued by Dr. Ryerson throughout the last few years. His (Mr. Reesor's) only wish was to put the matter in a proper light. He had to speak of the money which had been placed in the hands of the Superintendent by the Government, and of which money it was well known he (Dr. Ryerson) had appropriated the interest, and which, up to the present time, had not been refunded. (Hear, hear.) There were other features in his (Dr. Ryerson's) character which he had also reference to, the principal one of which was that the Rev. Superintendent had entered the political arena, and had, for a length of time past, occupied a most conspicuous position as a political writer against the opposition and in favor of the Government. He would therefore move—"That while this Council take much pleasure in expressing their appreciation of the services of the Chief Superintendent of Education, the Rev. Dr. Ryerson, they do not wish to be understood as approving of the Rev. Superintendent's course in applying the interest arising from the School Fund, placed in his hands, to his own use without proper legal authority, nor yet of his entering so far in the political discussions of the day as to identify himself with either political party." He hoped the members of the Council would not imagine that he was bringing forward the motion for the purpose of securing the Rev. Dr. for the manner in which he had acted as Superintendent of Common Schools, for such was not the case. His only wish was to show that they did not approve of some of his actions as Superintendent.

Mr. Wheeler having seconded the motion Mr. James rose and said, that he also considered that when a servant or hired man was entrusted by his employer with any money, it was his duty to render a faithful account of it. And as Dr. Ryerson, whom he had known for the last 35 years, was a public servant, he (Mr. James) was of opinion that it was also his duty to render a faithful account of all the money which had been entrusted to his charge. Cap. Armstrong said he had no idea when he moved the resolution on the previous day, that any member of the Council would consider it too strong. He had no doubt whatever that, if it had fallen to the lot of Mr. Reesor to propose it, he would have made it even stronger than it was. (Laughter.) It was also intended to be the expression of the Council towards the manner in which Dr. Ryerson had acted as Superintendent of the Schools, and not in regard to any other subject.

Mr. Hunter was engaged politics being introduced into the Council. If he had been present when Amusements.

My heart is thine, as the cabbage said to the cook.

Dog-stealing in the second degree—A man's boots and shoes get tight by rubbing water, but the man doesn't.

A smart chap that who awoke very early one morning and found himself asleep.

Surely it is a blessed privilege to be kissed by the breeze, that has kissed all the pretty women in the world.

A Recently Bachelor says, "The friendship of two women is always a plot against a third."

A Beautiful Brunette said her brown complexion was owing to her being so often teased.

Woodman spare that tree; strike not another stroke; for if you do, sir, you're head will sure be broke.

An Irishman complained to his physician that he had stuffed him so much with drugs, that he was sick a long time after he got well.

A Sergeant, passing along one of the streets near the Tower, observed one of his men setting against a wall. He was the worse for liquor, and on asking him why he did not go home, he replied, "O, sergeant! all the houses seem to be passing by so I think I had better wait till the barracks come, and then I can go in without any trouble."

A Dandy who had a "splendid" moustache, being asked at party to favour the ladies with a song, replied that he really "couldn't" remember the tune. A beauty who was near exclaimed, "Oh, dear how can that when the hair (air) is hanging on your very nose."

She has been since married to him; and her right for her impudence.

Miscellany.

A master should be sometimes blind, and a servant sometimes deaf.

Envy.—No whose first emotion on the view of an excellent production is to under-stand it, will never have one of his own to show.

A Flower for the Heart.—A wife full of truth, innocence, and love is the prettiest flower a man can wear next to his heart.

When a malignant monster strikes at the great benefactors of his race, he deserves, like the Indian who badly fired his arrow at the sun, to be smitten with the cure of blindness.

Many folds their hands in petitions when they ought to be using them in toil. They never learn that a useful, toiling life may be a perpetual prayer, to it is a perpetual hymn.

Living at Peace.—The true secret of living at peace with the world is to have a humble opinion of ourselves. True goodness is invariably accompanied by gentleness and humbleness of mind. Humility is the first lesson which our Divine Legislator has given to man; it is with that he opens the gates of salvation: Blessed are the poor in spirit!

The Right to Run.—No man should be delicate about asking for what is properly due him. If he neglects doing so he is deficient in that spirit of independence which he should observe in all his actions. Rights are rights, and if not granted, should be demanded. The selfish world is little inclined to give one his own, unless he have the manliness to claim it. The lack of the proper fulfilment of this principle has lost to many fortune, fame, and reputation.

O, the Tongue.—The slanderer of which- ever sex is a pest in any society. They are a character made up of a combination of vices, the most prominent of which are lying, backbiting, idleness, hatred, revenge. No single one, but altogether these vices are used in their combination, which make them as miserable as they strive to make others. Idleness is burdensome, lying is injurious, and through lying, revenge is brought about. This is but a faint picture of the character of a community's greatest pest.

The Heart.—The heart can never forget the object of its affection. The brow may wear a gloomy frown, and the eye may only turn on the beloved object, but could the visions pierce through the casements of the heart, it would behold a different scene; instead of frowns, it would be sunshine; in stead of coldness, a red hot furnace would be raging in the centre. And it is thus with its heart; it cannot forget; you may separate it from the dispirited years may roll on, but it holds its forms by the first glance of recognition, the wrong, the insult, the cruelty of ransacked years will rush like a flood of lava through its channels and it will stand on the same ground as it occupied years before.

Curious Your Wife.—What animal but man did you ever see maltreat a female of his species? The claims to pity and uncom- mon consideration every woman builds up during a few years of marriage! Her in- estimable value in the household—How true is she, unless her husband corrupts her or drive her to despair! How often is she good in spite of her example! How rarely she is evilly disposed but by his example! God made her weaker but by his example! God made her weaker but by his example! God made her weaker but by his example!

PERPETUAL MOTION.—A Mr. Andrew Ross, of Ottawa, claims to have discovered the perpetual motion. He says: "I have two depressed springs and two working springs, it will work as long as iron and brass will stand."

In the construction of the Victoria Bridge, Montreal, 3,281 men are employed, 140 horses, 200 stationary engines, 100 locomotives, and 500 wagons, besides 100,000 tons of iron and steel.

Austria has abandoned the project of concentrating an imposing force on the Serbian frontier. Great depression prevailed at Vienna. The object of the conspiracy at Cretow was to recover the independence of the republic. It was rumored, but not credited, that Russia had succeeded in negotiating a loan of several millions sterling with the Rothschilds of London.

A bet was recently made in Albany, that of a large crowd of applicants for relief at the office of the Overseer of the Poor, at least half a dozen had money in the Savings Bank; and to test the matter, a report was circulated that the Commercial Savings Bank had failed. In an instant, thirteen of the beggars were rushing madly for the Bank in order to save their money from the wreck.

Austria has abandoned the project of concentrating an imposing force on the Serbian frontier.

Great depression prevailed at Vienna. The object of the conspiracy at Cretow was to recover the independence of the republic. It was rumored, but not credited, that Russia had succeeded in negotiating a loan of several millions sterling with the Rothschilds of London.

A bet was recently made in Albany, that of a large crowd of applicants for relief at the office of the Overseer of the Poor, at least half a dozen had money in the Savings Bank; and to test the matter, a report was circulated that the Commercial Savings Bank had failed. In an instant, thirteen of the beggars were rushing madly for the Bank in order to save their money from the wreck.
